Partnership now a formal thing

REGIONAL Development Australia Great Southern and South Coast NRM have formally joined forces to promote and achieve sustainable development in the region.

Both recently formalised their partnership for the purpose of working jointly to support the sustainable use of resources and better management of natural and social assets in the Great Southern.

RDA Great Southern chairman Milton Evans said the memorandum of understanding would maximise the effectiveness of engagement between both parties.

"By working together, both RDA Great Southern and South Coast NRM aim to share resources, skills and research to maximise and deliver outcomes that will bring long term benefits to the region," he said.

South Coast NRM chairman Alex Campbell said the memorandum would benefit the community, industry and government support for activities organised under the five major themes: land, biodiversity, cultural heritage, coastal and marine.

RDA Great Southern will use the information to articulate to governments what is needed in the region to address priorities.
